The glass is complete; there is a small chip on the rim. It is in two parts: the stem, which continues into the bowl, and the foot. The bowl is conical, with a wall that flares out at the top and a flared rim with a plain, trumpet-shaped top. The bottom of the cup is thick and rounded on the inside. The stem is cylindrical and hollow. The foot is circular. It has a conical profile and its rim is folded on the underside. The center of the underside of the foot shows a small trace left by the pontil, a tool used by the glassmaker to make the glass ; The decoration is fashioned on the stem. The stem is hollow and decorated with a long internal air bubble in the shape of an inverted cone.
