erected after the style of the French châteaux of the sixteenth century, but of course embracing twentieth century ideas of spaciousness, convenience and elegance. Over one million visitors spent their dollars here given the world this marvel of architecture. Crossing the cliff, on which the famed Duffin Terrace stretches 26 great levels – the longest promenade known, for it now extends past the citadel to the Cove Falls – hundreds of feet above the St. Lawrence and the Lower Town, the perspective of the city, stream and landscape seen from the windows of this unique hotel is magnificent – and it is both lovely and free. The hotel is a masterpiece of modernity, river and island, from an elevation such as no other city boasts. The Château still impresses the beholder as so fitting in its adaptability to the
